Halo xbox controller

This is the most common control scheme despite many flaws see below that often become apparent to more experienced players. This is the control scheme that Bungie starts you with, but it is suggested that one quickly learns to either use the claw grip, bumper jumper, walkie talkie, or possibly even green thumb, all of which are more often used by experienced players. Please note that it is not possible to aim while meleeing, jumping, and deploying equipment without use of the "claw grip. Please note that if you compare new players using all button layouts this is the most accurate. Because unlike all of the other layouts offered in the game this is the only one that you are not required to use the same hand to shoot and aim with. Therefore having more reaction time and accuracy. This has the advantage of giving the user aim while meleeing, but has the disadvantage of not allowing you to aim while throwing grenades. Please note that it is not possible to aim while throwing grenades, jumping, and deploying equipment without use of the "claw grip. This has the advantage of giving you some control over your aim while meleeing without compromising the aim of your grenades. However it is considered hard to learn and can be somewhat unreliable if not mastered. Please note that it is not possible to aim while zooming, jumping, and deploying equipment without use of the "claw grip. Also this is very similar to the default Call of Duty controls. This has been called by many to be the best possible controller configuration as you can aim while meleeing, jumping, zooming, and throwing grenades without having to use the uncomfortable claw grip usually only taking a few days to learn. Please note that it is not possible to aim while deploying equipment without use of the "claw grip," although this is not much of a deterrent for most. Bungie originally considered this as the default control scheme of Halo 3 , but thought it would be too radically different to players used to Halo: Combat Evolved and Halo 2 and so altered it into the actual default configuration. However, with its relative popularity among Bungie workers, it was kept as an alternate configuration. Using the Banshee becomes much easier with this control scheme, seeing as how you can use your cannon and aim, as well as perform tricks and determine your trajectory at the same time. This has very similar advantages to Bumper Jumper except you can aim while deploying equipment but not while jumping, and it is much more convenient to communicate with your team as you can continue walking and aiming while you switch into your team chat. I got the elite 2 controller any settings that would be good for this game. Show More Show Less. I still play with bumper jumper even though I have paddles on my controller. Go up in sens if under, down in sens if over. With stick height it is really preference. I play with default sticks. With the tension it really is a matter of if you enjoyed the style or Xbox one style of stick tension had higher tension. Xbox one is loose. With paddle configuration I would keep the buttons stock. Only if you have two paddles would I change up buttons depending on game and needs. I do not have a Elite controller, just a custom color Regular one. If you would be so kind to send me yours I PM'd you my address , then I'll let you know, and send it back in a couple of years, along with your shipping cost, I'm not a savage. Whatever you prefer.
